

Neuter your cat for £5

Many people believe that a cat should be allowed to have kittens. But if you ask why, most won't know. That's because it's an old wives' tale – it's not true.

Until you've had her spayed, your cat will want to go outside and mate. But it isn't because she wants to have babies. It's just her hormones making her feel that way and she doesn't know that it will lead to her becoming a mum.

If she has kittens, you'll have to buy more cat food, pay their vet bills and find them new homes. While she is looking after kittens, she won't be able to do all the things she loves. Going outside, climbing trees and jumping up high!

Give her the freedom to enjoy all this – have her spayed.
